What Is Photoshop? Here are some benefits of using Photoshop for computer imaging: What to expect from Photoshop? The chances are that if you are reading this article, you have heard of Photoshop in one way or another. Photoshop has been on the market for many years now, but what can you expect to find when you open the door? In terms of what to expect in Photoshop CS5 you will find: Raster editing: The layer-based editing system that enables raster image creation and altering with multiple overlays that support transparency. Lightroom is based on the same editing principles as Photoshop, but in a browser. Raster Editor, Layer Style, Swatches and Layers Adjustments and preferences Monochrome and Grayscale Support Multi-Window editing (with Multiple Images) Composites and straightening Vector editing Fast, efficient and intuitive Paint and Ink tools Eraser and Healing tools Miscellaneous tools Painting and Embossing The Paint and Ink tools available in Photoshop CS5 enable you to add high-quality paint textures to your images. Like with any paint product, the strokes are brushed on with the paint stylus (brush). If you are like me, you may not have a large supply of different textures when working with a digital camera. With the Paint and Ink tools, you can create a number of different textures, and take them with you. You can also create your own textures with the clean and precise Paint and Ink tools. The goal is to use the paintbrush to paint textures onto your images. The available paint brushes are Pressure Paints (1 – 9), Isoprin, Water Colors (1 – 4), Dusty and Mylar, Bronze and Gold, Drypoints, Manual, Oil Pastel, Fabric, Liquid colors (1 – 9), and Paints (1 – 18). Paint and Ink brushes are stored in the Brush Gallery, and can be easily accessed in Photoshop. To create a texture, first open the Brush Gallery and select the paintbrush you would like to use. To create a texture, simply paint over the source image to create a new texture. You can rotate and scale the image to get the perfect amount of paint on your texture. Once you are satisfied with the texture, you can apply the texture with

Control of fluctuations in top-down attentional guidance: Evidence from orienting effects. Research on attention to visual stimuli has found that the lower orienting attentional bias of cue-target (CT) sequences (the previous cue influences the next target) is less strong than the orienting attentional bias of target-target (TT) sequences (the previous target influences the next target). This shows that top-down attentional control suppresses the orienting effect within TT sequences. Here we examine the role of top-down control in the CT sequence. Specifically, we show that the CT bias is not suppressed within a trial but after trial presentation, after attention has shifted to another part of the display. The behavioral index of top-down control is adopted from previous studies on orienting biases, in which the magnitudes of biases are determined as the difference between the effect of target presence during targets and the effect of target absence during targets. The results indicate that the visual attention system exerts control on these stimuli that facilitate the next task. Therefore, we conclude that visual attention is modulated by top-down factors during each task and attention is recruited even in visual tasks that are not cued.

Q: Possible bug with tiny, use of uninitialized value in I'm seeing a use of uninitialized value in an evaluable statement at /home/pranav/workspace/slim3/app/models/user_badge.rb:73:in `permit!'. I am using slim and trying to save a token to a user's hashed_password. Here is the code: hashed_password = BCrypt::Engine.hash_secret(password, salt) ^^^^^^^^^^^^^ uninitialized value if user_badge.save user_badge.user.update_attributes(:password => hashed_password) render 'show', :notice => "Yay the user's badge has been updated" else render :action => 'new' end

A: You should not use BCrypt::Engine.hash_secret: The purpose of this method is to generate a new hash when called without parameters. The method accepts any string argument and returns the BC
