I am working with an array of objects. Each object has a delete button. When the user clicks the button, I want to remove that object from the array. My problem is that I need a reference to that object in the array to delete it. Here is an example: This is the general concept: for (MyObject entry: myArray) { entry.delete(); } // at this point, the array is ready for the next iteration, but the objects have been removed. for (MyObject entry: myArray) {

In particular, the invention relates to a method for fabricating a DRAM (Dynamic Random Access Memory) cell capable of increasing the integration density of the memory and decreasing the fabrication costs by enhancing a patterning process. The integration density of a DRAM increases by the progress of fine processing techniques such as a fine patterning technique, high accuracy of a pattern alignment process, miniaturization of a pattern shape and reduction of a thickness of a gate insulating film. However, the integration density of a memory cell has a limit due to a minimum line width of a gate electrode pattern. Thus, a capacitor with high capacitance and a low chip area is demanded. As a method for increasing the capacitance of a capacitor, reducing the thickness of a capacitor insulation film is known. The thickness of the capacitor insulation film is about 20 to 40% thinner than
