In this study, the author investigated 53 patients with craniocerebral trauma (CCT). In 25 of 53 cases (48%) the diagnosis of epilepsy was made within 24 hours and only in one case after the first post-traumatic day. The EEG examinations (n=27) had been performed on average 7 days post-injury (p.i.). In most cases the EEG yielded normal findings, i.e. epileptic discharges were not recorded. Some changes of higher cortical function were seen in 14 cases, i.e. in 7% of the cases of all the patients with CCT (2%) in those with closed CCT (14%) and in 1% in those with open CCT (14%).Strain-Specific Responses to Differential Regulation of Melatonin Gene Expression Mediated by Light-Dark Cycle. The photosynthetic apparatus of the Arabidopsis circadian clock mutant maleless-2 (mal2) is delayed in its oscillation period and the expression of nuclear-encoded clock genes is different from that of the wild-type. Under our light-dark regime, mal2 displays higher circadian rhythmicity than that of the wild type in both rhythms and amplitude. We examined how the light-dark difference influences the expression of clock genes in the presence of exogenous melatonin and analysed whether the normal circadian rhythm
