The skin is often the first site of metastatic disease. This is due to its accessibility, the presence of many blood and lymph vessels, and the continuous turnover of epidermal cells and keratinocytes. We describe a 47-year-old patient who presented with skin metastases as the first symptom of a carcinoma of the prostate. When I finished my elevator software, the more I thought about it the more I wanted to learn. I ended up pursuing an IRF certificate and progressing to a second in the same semester. I know a lot has changed since then but I’ve kept my independent project as a way to stay motivated and keep my programming skills sharp. Even if I
