Deemed cringe-worthy and irrelevant by some and very important in today's social context by others, buzzwords are definitely here to stay and especially important in marketing-related fields. If you don't know what buzzwords are, think of them as being words or phrases that have a certain hype around them (usually they sound impressive or cool) and not everyone always understands them straight away. If you want to "get with the times" and learn some new buzzwords, then you're in luck as there are dozens of lists with thousands of buzzwords on the Internet. Or, you could use New Work Buzzwords to analyze every website you visit and add a bit more context to the whole learning process. How does it work? At heart, New Work Buzzwords is your typical Google Chrome extension: easy to install from the Chrome Web Store, sits in Chrome's toolbar, and has a simple function and a straightforward GUI. The way it works is simple: the extension simply compares all the words on the website to those in the buzzword database and highlights them in case they match. To use it simply click its icon, accept the data terms, and click the scan button. The extension will display a list of all the buzzwords found on the website which you can view in the GUI, and all the found words will also be highlighted on the website. That's all. What's New In?

It is a Google Chrome extension that lets you scan a website for new and unique words. I mean that as in not only brand new words, but words that are also found in the Web address itself. When a new unique word is found and added to the database it will be highlighted in the website where it was found and so in your browser. Buzzwords: Word of the year Word of the year The word most often used in the English language is "the", according to "The Oxford Dictionary of English", a reference book issued by Oxford University Press. The first confirmed usage of the word 'the' in the English language is in 1300. The Oxford Dictionary of English first appeared in 1952 and is now the standard reference work. The fact that the English language had such a relatively short history explains why the word is so common and has become the standard in all grammatical contexts. When to use 'the' - If you want to sound smarter or are overusing pronouns (I, you, he, she, we, they), it is always better to use 'the' than alternative pronouns. Use it to emphasize the object in a sentence: "Sally is very pretty." "The little girl is very lovely." "Jane is a good friend." Also, in dialogue sentences, use it when talking about a particular person, you, or something specific: "The train came 10 minutes late." "I want to buy a new car." "I saw Steve at the party." Just a note on pronunciation. When you say "the" in spoken English, it is not pronounced with the short "e" sound. It is pronounced as "the". Use of 'the' is also common when referring to an abstract concept or idea: "The church is on the corner." However, when you are referring to something specific in a sentence, you can use either "the" or "a" or no article at all: "I saw a cat eating bird food." "She ate a piece of cake." or "I ate a piece of cake." Learn how to use it correctly: • The two common ways to use the word 'the' in a sentence are: (1) to start with 'the' to indicate a concept or idea, and (2) to use 'the' in the middle of a sentence to refer to a specific object. A couple of examples are given: • The animal on the field is a bull. • I saw the movie
