Cal Fire's Forrest - Cutting Brush in Malibu Photos Local brush burning is an important tool in the fight against wildfires. In the aftermath of the devastating 2017 Northern California fires, the U.S. Forest Service, the California Department of Forestry and Fire Protection and local firefighters spent weeks cutting millions of dead trees and thickets with hand-held chainsaws. Each bite cut tiny air pockets that can house embers and serve as hotspots for wildfires. The forest service also began to burn trees, not just to prevent new wildfires but to knock down growth that can fuel existing blazes. To do that, they need more fuel - lots of it. Tearing down even small branches
