Ernesto Enciso was awarded a Pulitzer Prize in National Reporting in 2014 for uncovering hidden government subsidies to California oil and gas companies. And Edward Roybal won the prize in Investigative Reporting in 2013 for exposing a manager at a public hospital who helped steer patients to one of the doctor's own private ventures. Both Enciso and Roybal's investigations were completed before they were out of office. California Journalist Ernesto Enciso Photograph courtesy of The Office of the President of the United States Ernesto Enciso One of the only state officials to receive a Pulitzer for work completed while in office is Brent Whitaker. In 2011 he won a Pulitzer for Investigative Reporting for his work on California's prison medical care, which later became a subject of his documentary "Scared Silent." Whitaker said he never received a jury citation from Columbia University. He won the prize for coverage of the inside dealings of prison nurses and doctors. Ernesto Enciso holds a PhD in anthropology and is the author of "Broken Bonds: The Collapse of California's Criminal Justice System."I'm having a problem with a friend that hasn't been in the guild for a long time that is using (what I thought) were my achievements to put her to a level that I'm at. She's just hiding behind a second account and trying to make me look bad. This is so much fun. I can't wait to read what she had to say. Oooooo....
