--This is the standard text that the user must type in the message text field on the server side, before sending the fax. If an end is specified as the destination for the message (by using a %), the recipient's fax number is obtained automatically (the system can recognize the numbers and separate them by commas). If a fax number is indicated, it is the user's responsibility to correctly type the number. --This is the address of the outgoing fax number, it is optional and is typed only if it is different from the message text. --This is the sender's fax number. If the destination of the message is specified, the system automatically types the number in. --If the destination is specified, the system automatically types the number in. --If the message text is too long, the system automatically adds a % sign to the end of the text. --If the message is too long, it will automatically be sent as a multipart message. --This is the path to the file that the user wants to send. For example, C:\sender\recipient\filename.txt. --The files can be sent as multipart messages. When sending multipart messages, the system automatically adds % signs at the end of the text and the amount of parts is calculated. --The system automatically parses the text into the parts according to the number of % signs at the end of the text, for example: The file is sent in parts: text (1 part), file (1 part), text (1 part), file (1 part), text (1 part), file (1 part), text (1 part) and so on. --If the user specifies the file to be sent as a part (the destination of the part will be the file's path), the system will always send the file as a multipart message. --The user can specify the file as a part for the message text. The user's address is automatically appended to the part's path. --The system automatically parses the file into the parts according to the amount of % signs at the end of the file path, for example: The file is sent in parts: text (1 part), file (1 part), text (1 part), file (1 part), text (1 part), file (1 part), text (1 part) and so on. --If the file is too long, the 1d6a3396d6
