Visiting a website is similar to reading a book for a lot of people. You're used to seeing websites, pages and articles that can be found in books. You go in, and you read it. You understand it and you get the message. Websites do the same thing, only a lot faster. It's that simple. Websites are a very essential part of our modern day life. The first ones were used just to sell goods and services to people, but now, they've become an extremely important part of any business or personal life. What makes websites different than any other medium is that they work instantly, and they are capable of delivering a very specific message, and they are meant for a very specific audience. Your website will be different from your book. You don't want to read a book about a BMW. You want to actually see the BMW. You want to look at all the features and see how they work. You want to touch them, feel them, and of course, see them up close. That's the same concept for websites. Your website should be the place where people get all the information
