After applying as a patent consultant with the International Patent Company, an inventor contacted me to review his patent application. He filed for the invention of " A mark." This patent application may have caused more confusion than clarity to readers looking for this patent. Since this is a technology patent not an invention patent, in this context, "mark" does not mean a mark or a trademark as one would believe. It means a piece of chemical that has a wide spectrum of impact on animals, plants, and microorganisms. The chemical in its most common and simplistic form is a fungicide. In this article, I explain what "mark" means and what the invention of " A mark" in a patent application means. The Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) has defined "mark" as "any substance that is introduced into the environment, or intended to be introduced into the environment, by man, and that results in. Impact or ecological or environmental effects of humans in the broadest sense (e.g., rising seas or deforestation) that are attributable to man-made activities, that can be identified, and that are separable from natural processes."<sup>1</sup> In 1982 Congress acknowledged that "mark" has another meaning when it enacted the Environment Protection Act (EPA) in 1988. That act directed the EPA to set and enforce the National Priorities List (NPL) to address the following objective and activities: "To impose and enforce sanctions and penalties on persons for failure to comply with and for violations of Federal or State environmental laws."<sup>2</sup> Patents Some of the patents define "mark" in terms of a mark or a trademark. A mark includes both words and graphic marks such as logos, trademarks, and plaques. 3. " mark" is defined as: "a mark, label, symbol, identity, brand or other indication that is used in the sale, advertising or distribution of a patented invention."<sup>4</sup> These definitions are used in the language of patent law, which describes a mark as: "any notice or designation that directly or indirectly indicates that the subject matter for which protection is sought is patented."<sup>5</sup> A patent or patent application is not a grant of rights in real property. The EPA has also adopted additional definitions of "mark" and "mark" that do not focus on the patent's language. For example,
