With an increase in the amount of and speed in which electronic data such as image data, voice data, and the like are transmitted and received in recent years, it is desirable to efficiently send information by high-speed data transmission such as high-speed downlink packet access (hereinafter, referred to as “HSDPA”) in Wideband Code Division Multiple Access (hereinafter, referred to as “WCDMA”) of the 3rd generation Partnership Project (3GPP) or high-speed downlink shared channel (hereinafter, referred to as “HS-DSCH”) in Evolved Universal Terrestrial Radio Access (hereinafter, referred to as “EUTRA”) of the 3GPP2. However, when the bandwidth of data is wide, packets are burstily transmitted and there are packets that are not transmitted. Thus, if data is sent after normal packets have been transmitted, there may be a shortage in the transmission capacity. Thus, to avoid this shortage in capacity in data transmission, a method of maintaining a constant transmission rate for data and transmitting packets by varying the transmission rate is introduced. For example, in HSDPA in WCDMA, a plurality of users have a pseudo-random code called a specific sequence and channels are divided into one or a plurality of H-ARQ processes (or re-transmission processes). When an H-ARQ process is enabled, if an error occurs in the packet data that has been multiplexed, the user side transmits ACK/NACK

(ACKnowledgement/Not ACKing) signals. If a packet is not transmitted to the other side because of a shortage in the transmission capacity, a retransmission request (Retransmission Request) is sent from the user side to the base station side. The retransmission request (Retransmission Request) includes information showing the address of the packet to be retransmitted and the size of the packet to be retransmitted. In response to this retransmission request, the base station performs retransmission of the data or confirmation of data reception. In a radio access network (hereinafter, referred to as “RAN”) in WCDMA, a base station that receives a retransmission request, transmits a response to the request to the mobile station via a shared downlink control channel (hereinafter, referred to as “S-DCCH

Economist Peter Fairley was quick to criticize the Government's record during his first press conference since Prime Minister Scott Morrison appointed him to the newly created post of Special Adviser on Economic Policy. Mr Fairley sat down with the Economic Editor on ABC2's "AM" program this morning and demanded the Government be honest about the true state of the nation's finances. "I think the first rule of politics is to be honest. I think the Government should start by being honest about the state of the nation's finances," he said. Mr Fairley went on to list a number of issues he believes the Government will have to address as it moves forward. "If the nation's finances are being placed on an unsustainable path, the first thing the Government needs to do is recognise that," he said. Mr Fairley also rejected the Government's pledge to cut the budget deficit to 2 per cent of GDP by the end of its first term. "It is no longer a sensible goal and it won't
