Field of the Invention This invention relates to the field of valves in general and more particularly to a valve mechanism for controlling the flow of fluid from one fluid chamber to another. b. Description of the Prior Art Heretofore, valves of various types have been used to control the flow of fluids to a single reservoir or to two reservoirs. Certain valves such as those shown in U.S. Pat. Nos. 1,732,186 and 3,050,913 provide a separate cover for each of the two fluid chambers. Such a design is not completely satisfactory since it requires two separate actuation means or systems such as a screw-type valve and a relatively complex linkage system. The valve of U.S. Pat. No. 3,500,169 is designed to have a single valve housing and requires a means for providing a relative flow into each of the fluid chambers. The valve of U.S. Pat. No. 4,046,512 employs a type of valve body requiring screw-type actuation means. This type of valve is not completely satisfactory since it is difficult to line up the screw threads when assembling. Another type of prior art valve is shown in U.S. Pat. No. 4,147,243. Such a valve employs a rotatable valve body having multiple orifices which are individually connected through individual tubes to the inside of a source of fluid. Such a system is relatively complex and cumbersome, particularly when requiring a large number of orifices and tubes. Accordingly, a need has existed to provide a simple and reliable valve which can control fluid flow from one fluid chamber to the other., for example, is wrong in logic. But all of our contemporary logic is based on one idea, that it can substitute for human experience, that we can construct a science in order to get rid of the need to do experience and simply gather information from our computers. Not that I am an expert in biology. But I know that all of the present day biology is also based on one idea, that of the modern synthesis, that we can construct biology using the various disciplines and using mathematics, and the experimental approach to do the 3e33713323
