What I like best about the tool is the fact that it does not modify the registry and you can use it on any computer and it is safe to your operating system. Other applications that I tried to use on my computer were not as user friendly and did not run as smoothly, so I can confidently say that Pazera Free Video to Flash Converter is a very superior software. I had an easy time coming across the tool on the internet and downloading it to my computer. Installation was fast and the application offered me a short time trial. Overall, I'm very pleased and glad that I decided to install the software and test it out. I had a great time using Pazera Free Video to Flash Converter and I couldn't wait to upload the tool onto the internet and share it with others. There are some flaws that Pazera Free Video to Flash Converter has, such as the interface is not as user friendly and it might be a little difficult to use. In addition, I did not like that the application does not offer a help file for usage and the user manual is not very in depth. Another problem that I had while using the tool was related to the fact that I was unable to run multiple encodes at the same time. This problem did not hinder the overall performance of the tool, but I did experience more frequent crashes. Still, I have to give Pazera Free Video to Flash Converter four stars because it is a very good software with great capabilities. A: I think you'll want to be looking at this API reference from Google, in particular the section on Permission types: `package chart import ("github.com/apparentlymart/go-textseg/textseg" "github.com/goadesign/draw" "github.com/goadesign/graphics/color" "github.com/goadesign/graphics/drawing" "github.com/goadesign/graphics/shape" "github.com/goades`
