===== Facebook's Open Graph protocol is a graphical way to connect a website's content to it's social properties, like likes and Facebook likes. The intention is to enable things like people searching for "likes" on Facebook to be interested in what your social pages are about. Many Facebook crawlers (like search engines, chat bots or Facebook crawlers) make use of the open graph protocol (the ` website) to extract and use information about your website content. The open graph protocol makes it easy to give your website a description to be displayed as 'About' or 'Product overview' or 'This page contains PageName's newest posts'. The Jedi Academy, the most prestigious school of the Jedi Order, is holding a competition to find the best trainer for Anakin Skywalker, the new Padawan. The great task of training a Jedi requires mastery of more than magic, lightsabers, and the Force, it also requires knowledge of many fields: from lightsabers to healing wounds. Your task will be much more complex than that of a Jedi, as the champion will be chosen by a series of tests, in which you must carefully manage the life, health and combat powers of your Padawan. It is a known technique to tune an atomic frequency standard (AFS) by observing a particular hyperfine transition in an atomic vapor. The AFS is part of a resonator system with a laser and a microwave signal source for the AFS, a modulation source and a clock signal for the AFS. The laser, which is typically a continuous wave (CW) laser, is tuned to the resonant frequency of the selected atomic transition, and the microwave source drives the AFS at frequency, thereby locking the AFS to the selected atomic transition. Operating as an ultra-narrow band frequency reference source, for drift at 10 MHz or less, the system is adversely affected by drift in the microwave sources, which can result in an unacceptably large frequency deviation. Thus, there is a need for an AFS having improved stability in the operating frequency. Efficacy and safety of mebeverine and 5% lidocaine in comparison with buccal infiltration anesthesia in electro-hysteroscopy. Thirty-seven women with uterine myoma were enrolled into the study. The patients were randomly divided into three groups, one of which, in addition to the local anesthesia provided by the mebeverine solution, underwent electro-hysteroscopy with the use of 4% lidocaine (10 mL) and a resectoscopic electrode. The other two groups underwent the same intervention with mebeverine only (20 mg per nostril) and buccal infiltration anesthesia with lidocaine (5 mL). The patients were questioned regarding the extent of pain experienced during the procedure and the degree of satisfaction with the anesthesia. Pain evaluation showed no significant differences in the three groups. Patients who received mebeverine only showed the greatest rate of completion, but the mebeverine group demonstrated significantly fewer side effects such as headache, dizziness, nausea, vomiting, and dry mouth, than those who received buccal infiltration.
