But don't think that neither of those things accomplished anything. No, they also contributed to our growth in two very major ways. Significant growth in revenue. Our biggest item of business comes in the form of our monthly newsletter. This quarter, we published our eleventh issue and our first full quarter with no paid circulation. The February issue is a mere 8,500 copies compared to the 16,000 copies it used to deliver. Of course it has been expanding our circulation base by selling subscriptions to this newsletter, but that was a purely proactive initiative. However, no matter what type of initiative it is, it is necessary to at least know how much your business sells and where it is being sold. We calculated that our total revenue in the first quarter was now up a stunning $95,000. This also means that we are able to raise our bank account balance to $75,000, which may not sound like a lot when compared to an overall market downturn, but it is a huge step in our growth, both in terms of financial stability and public perception. An example of our growth is given in the chart below. This is not to say that this is a direct or even unique relationship, but it is a relationship that shows how much sales contributed to a rise in the account balance. Large pancreatic endocrine tumor may be a pseudotumor in patients with cystic fibrosis. Pancreatic pseudotumors have been described in patients with cystic fibrosis (CF), mainly in those with a small pancreatic duct. Since CF patients with pancreatic disease may have a more aggressive course, we assessed the utility of imaging in diagnosing pancreatic pseudotumors in CF patients. We reviewed retrospectively the chest radiographs, barium swallow studies, and ultrasonographic (US) and CT scans of 22 CF patients (21 male, 1 female; age range, 3-21 years) with at least one episode of CF-related pancreatitis. We excluded a total of 17 patients with a prior pancreatic mass or surgery. In CF patients without prior pancreatic mass or surgery, the pancreatic mass had 2 major characteristics: cystic tumor, with a well-defined wall at US and a well-defined circumferential mass at CT (13/22, 59%), or a cystic mass with focal calcification at US and a solid tumor at CT (10/22, 45%). In the 5 patients with pseudotumor, follow-up US (4/5, 80%) or CT (5/5, 100%) demonstrated resolution of the pseudotumor. The prevalence of pancreatic pseudotumor in CF patients with pancreatic disease is much greater (75%) than that reported for the CF population as a whole (10%-15%). Imaging may be necessary to diagnose pancreatic pseudotumor. Pseudotumors are benign tumors, and therefore, they should not be regarded as
