on a layer that are closest to the selected box.

Q: Response

Header status code after location redirect I'm doing a post form that is sending a file to a server. I do this using [ValidateAntiForgeryToken] above the form. The form is sent successfully, the file is attached correctly and a response header is received that says: The page that you are looking for is currently unavailable. This may be due to an outage. Please try again later. There is a location header that says to go to another page on the server. My question is: Does sending a redirect after posting a form follow the same rules as for a GET (let's say for the redirection)? Can I get any information about the failed process? A: The form submission is not redirected anywhere. The page that you are looking for is currently unavailable is part of the standard ASP.NET error handling which is handled automatically. You don't have to worry about it.

---

---

---

Response.Redirect in ASP.NET is done independently from form POST action and controller - it's an entirely different process and there is no way you can determine anything about the failed request from the result code of the response header. The redirection from the browser to the POST location happens

---

asynchronously - usually in a different thread or callback function.
In your scenario,
the asynchronous redirection is handled by the Windows web
server of your web application, which will attempt to redirect on a different thread or

callback function and not during the actual page handling. In a simple ASP.NET MVC application the redirection could be done on the Page_Load of the corresponding view. See also.

Control of size in DNA binding proteins. A systematic analysis of structure-function studies on the DNA binding proteins MutS, NAPQ-1, and IHF, has indicated that the control of the size of DNA binding proteins can be studied with a variety of structural and biochemical approaches. The approach used can determine the precise number of cooperative DNA contact points, the cooperativity of DNA contact, and the distribution of DNA contact. Such an approach provides a direct structural understanding of the mechanism of DNA binding. In addition, an analysis of the number of cooperative DNA contact points reveals the quantitative nature of the control of protein size by DNA. The analysis also demonstrates that the cooperative DNA contact points are the direct structural units of the interaction. Hive is cloud-native at its core, and the company is known for being the first to provide logical data containers that can be extended into new and interesting storage and analytical patterns. Today, the company announced new services that allow it to scale natively to 1 billion objects and handle petabytes of video streaming on demand. A video platform is what you need to run any live, streaming, or algorithmic video service. That means that you need to be able to store the data, whether in memory or in a database, at the speed required to process it. Amazon Web Services (AWS) has a few video-streaming options, but they're not very large or scalable. That's why in 2014, Hive launched Cloudlatch, a managed, persistent storage system that can store video streams and that allows these to be processed using the HiveQL engine and the Spark processing framework.

---

---

---

---

Cloudfatch has been a success in its own right, growing to more than a billion object storage and analysis objects by May 2017, and it's one of a new set of services announced today. Hive is now offering Cloudbatch's services for those running Hive-based services such as in-memory analytics or video streaming services, so your applications can run on top of Hive. But those products are far bigger than

---

Cloudlatch, so it's now also offering bespoke storage systems for large, potentially streaming, data sets. The new services — TerraLatch, TezLatch, and SparkLatch — are managed services, meaning they provide the hardware and data management capabilities to process large amounts of data with the HiveQL and Spark processing frameworks. Hive claims that even a small TezLatch node

---
