A major source of structural fatty acids in regenerating rat liver. The synthesis of fatty acids in the liver was studied during the liver regeneration of starved male Wistar rats. The fatty acid profiles in the liver phospholipids, triglycerides, and neutral lipids of fed and 16-h fasted animals were determined and compared. The hepatocytes from regenerating livers synthesized high proportions of C18:1 n-9 and C18:2 n-6 fatty acids in the phospholipids as well as triglycerides. The incorporated C18:2 n-6 into the phospholipids was about twice as high as that of n-3 fatty acids. The proportion of

C18:1 n-9 in triglycerides in the regenerating liver was similar to that found in the fed and fasted liver. The total synthesis of C18:2 n-6, C18:1 n-9, and C18:3 n-3 in the liver during the experimental period is estimated to be about 7.4, 6.6, and 4.0% of the precursors (palmitic, stearic, and oleic acids) in the liver. Other pathways of fatty acid synthesis and degradation in the liver were studied. The results obtained suggested that the proportion of C18:1 n-9 in the liver phospholipids may be mainly derived from the catabolism of phospholipids, whereas the proportion of C18:2 n-6 and C18:3 ca3bfb1094
