Recent studies have shown that insulin-like growth factor-I (IGF-I) exerts a wide spectrum of central actions including the anti-depressant effect in rats. The mechanism by which IGF-I exerts an anti-depressant effect remains unknown. Previously, we reported that intracerebroventricular (ICV) administration of IGF-I at a dose of 10-80 pmol/rat significantly decreased decreased immobility in the forced swim test, a typical indicator of the anti-depressant effect in rodents. In the present study, we investigated the involvement of brain-derived neurotrophic factor (BDNF) in the anti-depressant-like effect of IGF-I in rats. In view of the fact that ICV administration of BDNF also decreased immobility in forced swim test, the involvement of BDNF in the anti-depressant-like effect of IGF-I was evaluated by ICV co-administration of antibody against BDNF. ICV co-administration of anti-BDNF antibody at a dose of 25 microg/rat clearly blocked the anti-depressant-like effect of IGF-I. These results indicate that IGF-I exerts an anti-depressant-like effect through BDNF.A bomb detonated at the entrance of a shopping mall in Nigeria's main city of Abuja Friday, killing several people and injuring at least two, according to the security ministry. Tensions are high in Nigeria following the recent terrorist attacks, following the Supreme Court ruling which annulled the decision of the federal government to block the social networking website, Twitter, in 2012. A government-appointed panel has also suspended 10 members of the armed group Boko Haram. Police chief Musa Ibrahim told the AFP news agency that the explosion at the Jeewood City Mall at around 2.30pm (1230 GMT) left one person dead and at least five others injured. "We have recovered two other (explosive) devices" Ibrahim said, adding that security has been intensified around government buildings. In April, Boko Haram killed more than 150 people in a series of bombings and shootings across Nigeria. The insurgents
