The End of an Era.

Tarnished, a young Lord who has already lived on this world for a long time, has put in a hundred years. The Elden Lords, the legendary Lords of the deep, have not appeared for an entire hundred years, and all the roots of civilization and its people are threatened at this critical point. Prospectors have been suddenly appearing from the other land full of mines and quarries. They are violently breaking into our world and seeking riches at any cost, seeding the land with treacherous and lethal monsters...

I will Rise!

Recently, a high level Tarnished in the Lands Between has appeared. He has the spiritual power bestowed by destiny and lets nothing deter him. He is true to his quest to Become an Elder.

Various circumstances are a reflection of the mysterious ways of what has heretofore been kept secret about Elden Lords. This player even appears on the other worlds, and these worlds exist in the distant Lands Between. Although still uneasy, this character is surpassingly strong.

I will soon reach what is called the 'human limit'. What lies ahead of me I do not know, but I shall set out with determination.'

An unfamiliar Tarnished comes wandering into my castle!

A Tarnished, whose appearance is quite unusual, has appeared on the other land, unexpectedly. I understand that this is Tarnished no.133, a high level Lord, a true Elden Lord, Orroron. Here is the location information.

I Summoned An Elder.

I met Tarnished no.133 just as he started his journey. He is a Tarnished of legendary standing in his world, and seeks to become an Elder of the deep. He has the desire to clarify his destiny

Xbox: Action RPG Persistent 360: >The present disclosure relates generally to portable computing devices and more particularly to using a USB power cable to charge a portable computing device. Computing devices range from relatively small devices that are occasionally carried, such as cellular telephones and personal digital assistants, to large devices that are either housed in a fixed location such as a desk or laptop computer system, or housed in a vehicle, such as an automobile or airplane. Computing devices often require power and, in many applications, have a fixed power supply, such as a car or an airplane that may not have a portable source of power, so that mobile power may be used to power the computing device. The portable computing device does not necessarily have to be capable of self-powering, but may be powered by a cable. This invention generally relates to a remote scanning device, such as a portable scanning device, and more particularly, to a portable remote scanning device provided to convert ultrasonic and shock wave signals into digital electric signals and transmit the converted signals. A conventional remote scanning device transmits ultrasonic pulses therefrom toward a subject and the transmitted ultrasonic pulses are received by a remote scanning device and converted from shock waves and then converted from electric pulses. One of the conventional devices will be explained in detail. One conventional ultrasonic remote scanning device includes an ultrasonic transmitting unit, an ultrasonic receiving unit, an A/D-D/A converting unit, a processing unit, and a telephone unit. The ultrasonic transmitting unit includes a transducer which converts an ultrasonic signal into an electric signal and irradiates the ultrasonic signal on a subject. The ultrasonic receiving unit receives the ultrasonic signal reflected by the subject. The A/D-D/A converting unit receives the received ultrasonic signal and converts the received ultrasonic signal into an electric signal. The processing unit processes the electric signal and determines whether or not the received signal is a desired signal, such as a heartbeat. The telephone unit receives the determination result and transmits the determination result to an external unit. In the conventional remote scanning device, however, when the ultrasonic remote
