“We believe that HyperMotion Technology will unlock new levels of physicality and tactical intelligence in FIFA,” said Matt Tribute, executive producer. Improved AI, improved collision modeling Tribute added that more intelligent AI will take the soccer pitch by storm, featuring improved teamwork, improved positioning, decision-making and more effort to show for themselves on the pitch. Improved AI means that players will initiate, say, a throw-in, using more intelligent algorithms that are already in development. Improved collision modeling means that bodies that touch will make the “correct” movement instead of unnatural, awful, hard-to-control movements that have become the norm. Improved ball control and handling Explained Tribute, “A new physics engine will deliver amazing ball control, allowing players to perfect their craft and drive the ball in any direction. As well as being able to stop the ball, players can spin it, fudge it, dribble it, and barge it through the entire team. The power of the ball is unprecedented.” Improved ball physics and control will also allow players to easily manage the weight of the ball, which will be essential in tricky situations. Player movements Similar to the ball physics, the movements of players will be more fluid. The ability to drive off the ball or shift players in different directions will be a vital part of modern sport on the pitch. Tribute said, “There’s more to soccer than goalkeepers and strikers. Teams play a completely different game today and it’s time to change the way they interact with the ball. HyperMotion Technology will allow all players to truly become a ‘pitch general’ and be the creative and decision making conduit of the match.” Improved dribbling and ball control “We’ve also made significant improvements to our dribbling controls and ball handling,” added Tribute. Improved dribbling will make it easier to touch the ball and get the desired outcome, and make use of all the new enhancements such as shifted weight, spins and more. Finally, Tribute added, “Despite improving dribbling, attacking players will still have to manage the weight and power of the ball to drive forward with confidence. We’re making sure that players will still have to be aware of their surroundings and adjust their body
