Picture: Lubomir Robota It was a lucky break for the residents of the city of Kutna Hora, because archaeologists have discovered a rare, perfectly preserved example of a vessel used in the first part of the millennium. It is made from a type of pottery long used for feeding people and cattle. The vessel is about 20cm tall and has a biconvex body in white clay with blue glaze. It bears the stamp "B 4 3439" indicating the year and place of its creation. Lubomir Robota, a professor at the Department of Czech Archaeology in Prague, has analysed the vessel. He says he thinks it came from Silesia. Picture: Lubomir Robota He told Czech Television: "I know it was made for feeding, and that it has survived for so long because it was buried deep in the ground. "The piece still has traces of the biconvex body in clay, which shows
