Altered expression of thymidylate synthase and thymidylate kinase in ovarian cancer. Thymidylate synthase (TS) and thymidylate kinase (TK) are rate-limiting enzymes in the de novo synthesis of thymidine nucleotides and are important in the regulation of the cell cycle. High TS and TK activities are associated with proliferating cells, and most cancer cells have high TS and TK activities. Some studies have shown that TS levels are higher in ovarian cancer than in normal tissue. In the current study, the authors have quantitated the level of both enzymes in tumor, ovarian surface epithelium, and blood in patients with ovarian cancer and compared them with those in patients with benign ovarian tumors. TS activity is generally elevated in ovarian cancer compared with normal ovarian surface epithelium and blood. In contrast, TK activity is generally elevated in blood compared with ovarian cancer. In the current study, the authors observed a consistent elevation of both TS and TK activities in epithelial ovarian cancer compared with normal ovarian surface epithelium and blood. The elevation of the activity of TS appears to be due to increases in TS protein rather than TS mRNA. The general elevation of TS activity in ovarian cancer tissues is similar to that in other malignancies, indicating that TS is a marker for malignancy.
