There are those who build empires and those who bask in the glow of their empires. Opinion Don Bacon If you're familiar with the famous quote, "Politics is the second oldest profession in Washington," then you'll understand why the person I'm referring to has such a distaste for our political gridlock. ADVERTISEMENT While some career politicians will concede there's a problem, many of the folks on Capitol Hill are drowning in a sea of partisan bickering. It's truly the "oldest profession" if a career politician can survive in the House of Representatives and not recognize the impact of their actions. Like it or not, every issue is viewed through the prism of party affiliation. Legislative action must be stalled at all costs if it includes changes to entitlement programs. This political stand-off on the debt ceiling would only be the beginning if there's a government shutdown. The tax code hasn't been changed in more than 30 years, but lawmakers are constantly talking about cutting taxes for businesses while raising taxes for the middle class. The House has passed the Fiscal Year (FY) 2016 budget twice, but the Senate has yet to pass its version. During this same time frame, NASA has said it will soon run out of money to

This review of vascular biology examines the molecular basis and clinical implications of the interactions between endothelial cells and other cell types of the vascular wall. The review highlights the roles played by various cell types that comprise the vascular wall. Studies on stem cells and tissue engineering are also discussed. Numerous studies over the last decade have indicated that the gene expression pattern in vascular endothelial cells is altered with ageing. Moreover, the microvasculature in the brain shows a loss of endothelial cells during ageing. Novel vascular models have also been proposed that provide an alternative to the animal models currently used to study pathological angiogenesis and blood-brain barrier dysfunction. Stem cell therapy is a novel method for using stem cells for tissue repair or to replace damaged tissue by replacing a cell of a different type. Current research is shifting the focus to manipulating stem cells with the aim of stimulating angiogenesis and promoting tissue repair. In this review, we examine the impact of vascular structure, function and its formation with age. With new advances in organ-specific repair therapies, we can expect to witness real success soon.Q: How do we fix a clock in the hallway? I know that this seems like a very simple question, but I can't seem to find a straightforward answer on any of the questions that I've found regarding this. We're doing some general maintenance in my house and found a timer in a hallway that's been running for a long time. The numbers on the face have gone bad and I'd like to replace it, but I'm a little confused as to how to read it. Here's a picture of the timer (the glass is cracked/broken): A: If you "just want to replace it" and "want to know how to
