I want to run a command via $command in a new terminal window after my script finishes executing. Something like this: #!/bin/bash #... #... # if $this_var == true # then # $command # # command need to execute in a new terminal window # fi A: This is a job for the nohup command: #!/bin/bash #... #... # if $this_var == true # then # nohup $command & # # command need to execute in a new terminal window # fi No matter whether a script is run in terminal or not, nohup will ensure that the process is allowed to continue running after you close the terminal. There's also the screen command, which allows you to run a program at a specified time interval. If you want to run a screen for a given time, the command is as follows: #!/bin/bash #... #... # if $this_var == true # then # /bin/screen -ls; /path/to/command # # command need to execute in a new terminal window # fi If you want to run a screen for a given time, type screen -ls, in the present example, to know when the program screen will automatically shutdown. It will run until you enter ctrl+a+d. Q: How to query for multiple fields Let's assume I have a table that looks like this | id | user_id | object_id | title | ---------- | 1 | 3 | 4 | test | | 2 | 3 | 2
