Inflammation is triggered by solar ultraviolet radiation (UVR) absorbed in the skin. UVR also affects the function of immune cells, the production of vitamin D, and the synthesis of hair and skin lipids. To prevent or reduce sunburn, patients must wear protective clothing, use sunscreen, and avoid prolonged UVR exposure. In people who are not exposed to UVR, sunscreen and vitamin D supplementation are recommended for the prevention of cutaneous cancers. The molecular targets of UVR that lead to inflammation are also the targets of several anti-inflammatory therapies. We describe here the inflammatory mediators, natural products, and newer drugs that prevent or treat sunburn and prevent and treat cutaneous tumors. We also describe several negative consequences of UVR, such as pigmentation changes, ochronosis, and skin aging.Are you a fan of the show Adventure Time?
