"The world of Elden Ring is enveloping, which has a nice style. And a layout of the map of Elden Ring, I am playing, which is extremely useful. The parts of the player's main character can be customized, and even the color of the player's character can be changed." Reviewed by Victor"The first person shooting element of Knights of Pen & Paper is amazing. A lot more polished than my previous attempts at the type, which makes it a bit of a departure for me since I'm used to sitting back and letting the dice decide what happens in games." Reviewed by The Display"I like how the combat system is a hybrid of single-player and online elements with the latter being asynchronous. It felt really natural since as a player I would just become "online" rather than do something online." Reviewed by Vox"I really like the unique layout of the world map that allowed us to see other player's characters moving around as we moved around the map. The theme of this game is a very interesting way of looking at the world, using a mix of fantasy and what seems to be Arthurian legends." Reviewed by Refenes"This game is truly off the map." Reviewed by Corey"A nice fantasy world brought to life with a lot of character." Reviewed by LadyfromTM"I really like the world maps which change during gameplay. The vibrant, colorful world really made me excited to explore." Reviewed by Jerry"In a lot of ways, Elden Ring feels like classic SRPG games. All the mechanics are nice, and you can understand the gist of them if you're a veteran of the genre." A: You are asking the wrong person. There are several ways to get ixChrome to compile and host, but really, this isn't really what the site is about. I recommend looking at bugreports.net for alternative browsers that don't require compiling code. Here's how to use a minimal install of Ubuntu to host and compile: Go to the Linux Wiki and download Ubuntu, choose a version that offers the same architecture as Windows 10. Find a 64-bit ISO. Boot to the installer (usually called something like "desktop" or "Live"), keeping in mind that the ISO is meant to create a running system, not install it. Set your timezone, try the keyboard options, click on the install icon, and on the first screen, click on "Try Ubuntu" and when prompted, install Ubuntu. Install the "Universe" repository, ideally from the default mirror. Log into your new account. Go into a terminal window (Super+Alt+T) and type "sudo dpkg -i bumblebee-nvidia-installer_*.deb". Replace with that of the version number of your NVIDIA driver. Type "sudo prime-select nvidia" and then type "systemctl enable bumblebee." If you were to do this on Windows, it would actually be very easy to set up an easy execution command for your NVIDIA drivers, taking out the manual work. When you are done installing, you can type "systemctl stop
