The question was, without having to do any complicated network architecture, will it be possible to connect three computers which are on separate networks without using any form of a software or hardware device that will force all these computers to be on the same network and work on that same network? Actually, I am in the process of converting all 3 computers to Linux. I would love to do it with just a USB stick. And, let me tell you, it might be possible to do what you are looking to do. I have long ago thought of this kind of thing but have been looking for some help in finding a real physical router that will allow this kind of thing to happen. If
