This is an opportunity for scouts and front office personnel to get up close and personal with these players and get a better understanding of their skills. The Lions also have an opportunity to add in a couple of players during the combine. Detroit has a specific plan in place for this, but the plan was general rather than anything to do with specific players. Based on my interpretation of the plan, there are five things that may help Detroit with the Lions' current roster. Sign up for the FREE Detroit Lions FC newsletter today! The running game is the cornerstone of this Detroit Lions team and the team has found that the best way to use Ameer Abdullah is by putting him in the red zone. Abdullah has a key stat here, and it has to do with what constitutes red zone touch. That stat was what I discussed in this breakdown from earlier in the week. In three of the last five seasons, Abdullah has a better average yards per carry in the red zone than he does overall. Source: MyPatriots.com Abdullah is able to do this because of his outstanding ability to break tackles and/or get to the second level. Detroit did a great job when it drafted Abdullah by searching for ways to use him in the red zone. As the plan continues, hopefully Abdullah continues to flourish. 2. Third down production. This has been a consistent issue for the Detroit Lions
