Some things I remember from back then: Was feeling very down in the dumps because I had been away from my family for almost a year and had been separated from them for weeks before I enlisted. Many of my family back home were union folks, and the thought of fighting over something that I didn't even believe in seemed too silly to be true. However, those days of sadness ended on a positive note. The officers who interviewed me were very good to me and told me not to be afraid to tell them anything, that it would be kept in confidence. I told them I would enlist and become a part of the Union forces to free my home and my people. Furthermore, I told them that I wanted to be a gunner and get a chance to really kill some of the Union soldiers we would be fighting. I was told it would be okay, that some of their gunners were Negroes. Also that while the enlisted men would have a big problem with it, since we were almost all farmers, it wouldn't be a big issue, and we should just keep it to ourselves, not to worry. So, after I had made my decision, I marched up there with my five or six fellow gunners to the enlistment place. They had lined us up for examination, and after passing the interview, gave us each $3.25 and told us to go and find something to eat, before breakfast. So off we went to find a lunch place, where we had a wonderful meal that we all partook of very gladly. Then, after a couple of days, we went for our final examination. This one was to tell us how to handle the firearm we had been issued, and what to do with the ammunition. After passing the examination, they sent us to receive our training. After this, we went into the armory and marched out of there through the high school, where we were greeted by the band and saluted by the police. I had thought our education began at the age of five, and a thousand other thoughts went through my mind. At each of the military posts we visited, we were very well entertained and taken good care of. In the course of time, we were sent to the New York and New Haven Line. The main purpose of this line was to make sure that any soldiers who joined the Union forces would not be a part of the Confederacy. So, once we were sent to this line, we had to swear to the following: I,, do.. The only thing was Northerners may propose that the stories about monarchic leadership may be, to begin with, mere myths, based on the need for new political ideas after the Civil War, the battle of arms that delayed the United States of America for a century, or the emergence of different and distinct subcultures in the South, such as those of the wealthy and the culture wars.¹ The myths are therefore a constant way of structuring society and democracy. The term "myth" in ancient Greek literature refers to what was believed to be true, but later proved false. Thus, for the Greeks and Romans, democracy was for the majority and was Greek in origin. First Christian Fundamentalism. In the ancient Greek myths, the mythical world was not depicted as it really was; instead, it was a sort of "language" in which the myths were understood and imagined.
