Keyboard Keys Text Tool.Image caption It may seem surprising that I've been watching this game, given that I'm contracted to write the next season of Game of Thrones. I love Game of Thrones. And like anyone who loves Thrones, I'm totally gripped by the idea that the next series will be the best series yet, and possibly the best series since the first one. So, what are the chances of that, and what am I even doing watching it? The answer is that I'm not really watching it - a fact that does not mean it isn't awesome. The common perception that only the most ludicrous of television cliches can get a substantial number of viewers to tune in is absolutely false. Thrones is a good example, as is the very fact that it is a very long season (it has 13 episodes of less than half an hour), but there are other, more quotidian shows, that not only enjoy large audiences, but that actually prove quite difficult to stop watching. Channel 4 has revealed that the total audience for Christmas was 12.54 million. It's the best-ever performance for a Christmas Day show. Game of Thrones is currently averaging four million viewers, so it is a good performer
