Q: How do you break on print()? I've got a web service (that outputs an img via print(). I'm debugging it using Django's break points and also using error.showtraceback = True, but they don't stop at print(). Is there a good way to work around this issue? I tried setting print() to return a string that the webpage can parse, but it also fails to stop at this: def test(): if __name__ == '__main__': return print("test") def hello(): if __name__ == '__main__': return print("hello") def set(self): if __name__ == '__main__': return print('set') def cal(self, n, x=1): if __name__ == '__main__': return print(x, n) class Test(object): def __init__(self): self.q = 0 def test(self): if __name__ == '__main__': return print("Start Test method") self.q = test() print("In Test method") def hello(self): if __name__ == '__main__': return print("Start Hello method") self.q = hello() print("In Hello method") def set(self): if __name__ == '__main__': return

For over a century, much has been done to treat or prevent various conditions associated with diminished cognitive ability. For example, Alzheimer's disease is a disorder that affects the intellectual functioning of patients, characterized by, inter alia, impairments in memory, logic, thinking, and judgment, and often leading to dementia. For many years, it was widely believed that Alzheimer's disease was caused by a dysfunction of the central nervous system, specifically, the loss of cholinergic neurons from certain brain regions. While the cause of the cholinergic neuron loss is unknown, if left untreated Alzheimer's disease can be fatal. In recent years, there have been a number of reports that individuals suffering from Alzheimer's disease may have an elevated level of specific brain peptides, specifically beta-amyloid. See, e.g., Gertsendorff, et al., "Cholinergic deficit and amyloid precursor-like protein expression in Alzheimer's disease: cerebral levels of amyloid precursor protein, APP and amyloid peptide correlate with cholinergic innervation and severity of dementia." J. Neurochem. 76:1071-1081 (2001); Koo, et al., "Amyloid precursor protein and Alzheimer disease: the association of APPe4 with Alzheimer disease." Brain Res. Bull. 39:123-131 (1996); Konig, et al., "Immunohistochemical localization of beta-amyloid precursor protein in the human central nervous system." Brain Res. 799:223-227 (1998). In addition, the β -amyloid peptide and the various derivatives there of have also been shown to be present in senile plaques found in the brains of Alzheimer's Disease patients, especially in Alzheimer's disease patients with multiple-infarct dementia. See, e.g., Koo, et al., "Amyloid precursor protein and Alzheimer disease: the association of APPe4 with Alzheimer disease." Brain Res. Bull. 39:123-131 (1996). Brain β -amyloid levels have also been correlated to the extent of cognitive deficit. See, e.g., Karran, et al., "Amyloid precursor protein: implication in Alzheimer's disease." Expert Opin. Invest. Drugs 6(1):35-43 (1997). The concentration of β -amyloid in the brains of patients with Alzheimer's disease is higher
