free.[Asymptomatic arterial restenosis after coronary arteriography in patients treated with ticlopidine]. This study was designed to demonstrate the incidence and characteristics of arterial restenosis after coronary angiography in patients treated with ticlopidine. The study group included 547 patients receiving ticlopidine (group I) and 111 patients not receiving ticlopidine (group II) (control group) who underwent coronary angiography. Angiograms, performed in the absence of symptoms, revealed asymptomatic restenosis in 0.9% in group I and in 5.4% in group II. In group II a greater frequency of restenosis, despite a significantly older age, was also noted in lesions of the proximal portion of the artery. Only three cases of restenosis could be attributed to ticlopidine use. These findings confirm the efficacy of ticlopidine as antiplatelet drug and demonstrate that the addition of this agent does not increase the incidence of arterial restenosis.

Q: How to pass a function as an argument? I have a function: `function createChange(what, place, event) { return $("").insertAfter(place); }` And it has 2 params. How can I pass it as an argument? Something like this? `var createPlace = function(what, place, event) { return $("").insertAfter(place); }` `var change = createChange('div', '#other_place', 'click');`

A: The arguments part of function in javascript is optional, but in case you want to attach argument you can do this:

```
function createChange(what, place, event) { return $("").insertAfter(place); } var change = createChange('div', '#other_place', 'click'); Or like this: function createChange() { return $("").insertAfter('div'); } 1cdb36666d
