same parameters? I just noticed that, even in c++03, I can always use the function-return operator new for like this `int* ptr = (int*) new char[size];` Whereas in c++98 I had to use the usual c++ cast expression `int* ptr = (int*) new char[size];` This is really strange to me. Why is this? A: In C++03 and C++11, new returns (int*) nullptr. In order to promote that to int*, you have to cast the result to the type you desire. According to the C++03/C++11 Standard (5.3.4p1 [expr.new] 1 The allocation function is equivalent to a call to the allocator associated with the object allocation function. 2 If no such allocator is associated with the object allocation function, or if the value of the allocator template parameter of the object allocation function is void, the allocation function is equivalent to a call to the standard C++ library function `::operator new (void*)`. The difference is that if `::operator new (void*)` is called, then the additional parameter of type `void*` is interpreted as a hint defining the amount of space to allocate, and does not cause the standard library to invoke its `void*` allocation function. Q: Wine causing corruption to wine directory I installed an.exe on Windows, and uninstalled the.exe. When I tried to uninstall it, it crashed. It has left a.exe inside the folder, and now there is a.wine directory that makes the computer extremely slow, and now it looks like this in the log

"It is our duty to work in full coordination with the leadership of the House Democratic Conference," Menendez said. "Our goal is to make sure that we are fully informed as to the actions of the president and that we exercise our oversight responsibilities effectively.” He went on to say that there was not enough time to allow Lighthizer to be fully vetted before the president’s announcement. “He has stated that we have 90 days to decide,” Menendez said. “It’s very unclear, but certainly, you know, I think it would be a very unfortunate step if they move forward with that appointment.” Menendez was accompanied to the podium by House Speaker Paul Ryan and Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer.
