Davidson, who is also a former director of the University of Waterloo Institute for Water Research, has devoted his career to conducting research that can benefit public health. His work has led to the development of effective technologies, including drinking water disinfection systems, to reduce exposure to harmful chemical contaminants in drinking water. "Dr. Davidson is a public health and environmental hero, whose contributions to Canada and the world have made our lives a little bit better," said Ontario Premier Dalton McGuinty. "He has dedicated his career to promoting health and protecting the environment, and it is fitting that he is being recognised with this prestigious honour." Dr. Davidson has been heavily involved in a number of initiatives to provide safe drinking water for communities around the world. His most recent project focused on the contamination of water supplies and human exposure to arsenic in West Bengal, India. His work there has helped improve water supply systems and also provided arsenic remediation technology to households. "Dr. Davidson's work has made a tremendous contribution to water quality and has allowed us to deliver safe drinking water to millions of people," said Dr. Larry Bernal, former minister of environment and science in the Mike Harris government. When I have a button in my view I would like to run the same method but I don't want to have the entire class in the view. How can I pass the view to my model in this case? Here is a simplified view: `public class MyActivity extends BaseActivity { ... public void onClick(View view) { SomeModel someModel = new SomeModel(); someModel.someMethod(); } ... }` And here is a simplified model: `public class SomeModel { public void someMethod() { //do something } }` A: Use a callback interface View: `public class MyActivity extends BaseActivity implements View.OnClickListener { ... public void onClick(View view) { SomeModel someModel = new SomeModel(); someModel.someMethod(this); } ... }` Model: `public class SomeModel { public void someMethod(View.OnClickListener view) { //do something } }` Now your Model can interact with the View without passing a reference.

Markup assist on the way to a new CAD standard Now that AutoCAD version 2023 has been released, the CAD community is coming together to discuss a new development standard for markup in CAD. Members of the markup working group — including Autodesk — are currently meeting to come up with a set of standards that can be used for the new standard. On the drawing markup standards page, you can find information on how you can participate in this discussion and submit comments for the markup standards and use cases you'd like to see in AutoCAD 2023. Although this markup standard won't be finished until after the 2023 release, Autodesk will start using the markup standard for now. Markup options help you design more efficiently When you open a drawing, you can now choose from two markup options: No markup or use markup. The default is No markup, which means you can still create a good-looking drawing without any markup. But if you're a visual designer or want to add feedback to your drawings, you can opt for use markup. New drawing template commands let you make changes at the drawing template level When you open a drawing template, you have a variety of commands available to you. Now, you can create a new drawing template from scratch, or you can edit the existing template to make changes to the drawing environment. New drawing template commands in AutoCAD 2023 let you add or remove objects from the drawing environment, create or delete templates, add or remove objects from layers, and create or remove graphic styles. You can also draw an object at the center of a circle or rectangle, use a library, save a drawing template, share a drawing template, export a drawing template, and more.
