Abnormal expression and localization of neurofilament L protein in axonal swellings of dementia of the Alzheimer type and other disorders.

An antibody to neurofilament L protein (NFP) was used to study neurofilaments (NFs) in the brain, particularly in axons. NFP immunoreactive NFs were present at normal levels in the hippocampus, where they were grouped in processes in the cell body layer, and in unmyelinated axons. In the senile plaques of the frontal cortex, NFP-reactive NFs also appeared in a pericellular distribution, and were present, with the tau-reactive NFs, in paired helical filaments. In the axons of the posterior commissure and of the medial habenular nucleus, and in the perikarya and dendrites of the dentate gyrus granule cells, NFP-immunoreactive NFs formed the characteristic beaded appearance seen in degenerating axons and normal axons with axon swellings. In cerebrocortical axons containing spheroids, the beads were the first to be dissolved. In multiple system atrophy, and in the lower brainstem of amyotrophic lateral sclerosis, NFP-reactive NFs were present in axons containing spheroids, and some NF bundles were surrounded by the spheroids. NFs in degenerating axons also appeared in axons with chromatolysis and axons containing swelled perikarya. In myelinoclastic lesions, NFs were observed to be highly phosphorylated. In Wallerian degeneration, and in most cases of chronic inflammatory demyelinating polyneuropathy, the NFs were not stained. NFs in axons with abnormal appearance may correspond to altered NFs, to degenerating NFs, or to undecorated NFs.Q: How to plot an extended region of a What's New In Photoshop 2020 (version 21)?

The benefit of celecoxib in combination with valganciclovir for treating cytomegalovirus retinitis. Cytomegalovirus (CMV) retinitis is an important complication of human immunodeficiency virus infection and the leading cause of blindness. The present study investigated the activity of the selective cyclooxygenase-2 inhibitor celecoxib in combination with the antiviral drug valganciclovir for the treatment of CMV retinitis. Using a murine model of ocular CMV infection, we observed that at equitoxic doses, the combination of celecoxib and valganciclovir was more effective than the combination of ganciclovir and valganciclovir in reducing both viral burden and damage in the retina. Suppression of cyclooxygenase-2 activity may enhance the activity of valganciclovir against CMV, as evidenced by the ability of celecoxib to increase the antiviral activity of ganciclovir.Epithelial cell alterations in human colon during the development of Familial Adenomatous Polyposis. The aims of this study were to examine the development of the colonic mucosa during Familial Adenomatous Polyposis (FAP) and in normal mucosa with emphasis on epithelial cell alterations. Colon mucosa from nine untreated FAP-patients and two normal controls was studied immunohisto chemically for expression of MUC2 and MUC5AC mucins, proliferation antigen Ki-67, and proliferating cell nuclear antigen (PCNA). In FAP-patients, the mucosa in the distal part of the colon revealed normal epithelial cell morphology, containing goblet cells with a normal distribution of MUC5AC and MUC2 mucins. The percentage of PCNA-labeled cells was low in the crypts, while Ki-67-positive cells were almost exclusively located in the uppermost part of the crypts. Compared to FAP-patients, colon mucosa of two normal controls exhibited smaller crypts and higher levels of MUC5AC and Ki-67 mucin expression. Proliferating cells in normal mucosa were evenly distributed over the crypts. The superficial mucosa in the distal part of the colon from FAP-patients, although morphologically unchanged, showed clear signs of epithelial cell alterations. The high level of MUC5AC expression and prolifer
