Thanks for your interest and have a great day!Saturation of transport by Na^+ and Cl^- in an epithelial cell line in culture. The fluxes of Na^+ and Cl^- were measured in the apical and basolateral membranes of MDCK cells using a flux-ratio technique in a single-compartment cell culture. The cell was cultured on permeable supports with the apical and basolateral sides of the cells separated by a 0.2-micron filter. A medium with the same ionic composition as serum was perfused in both directions in the presence of 10 microM ouabain. When the fluxes were measured in the presence of 25 mM Na^+ and Cl^-, the ouabain-sensitive Na^+ flux was approximately 11 times the ouabain-sensitive Cl^- flux. Both the permeabilities of Na^+ and Cl^- increased linearly with increasing external Na^+ and Cl^- concentrations up to 400 mM. Ouabain decreased the fluxes of both Na^+ and Cl^- by about 40%. The apical Na^+ permeability was inhibited when the ouabain-sensitive Na^+ flux decreased. The basolateral Na^+ permeability was unaffected by ouabain
