Only.exe or.msi files are allowed.Q: Why isn't a Dispatch.GlobalVar actually dispatched? This is a follow up to this question. As discussed in that answer, if you try to access a global variable in an area of code that isn't dispatched yet, then you get the error, but if you do add the global variable as a Dispatch.GlobalVar, then the variables appears to be dispatched. However, if you do access them from within another function, then the global variables are being unbound - not dispatched? Bug? Simple example: { -# LANGUAGE GlobalVariables #- } data Foo :: * -> * where Dummy :: Foo 'a data Bar :: * -> * where BarDummy :: Bar 'a bar :: IO () bar = print $ fromJust $ fst fromGlobal "foo" main = print $ fromGlobal "foo" I am running this with lhs-i386-linux-ghc-7.4.1 from Stackage-stable. A: The right question would be "why is the value in foo actually an unbound value rather than a proper bind?" For some reason it feels like we need to know something about Dummy's type and the way it's compiled to see that, but it's not really correct. All the code that looks at a global variable sees is a foreign pointer. The relevant part of the STG for Bar: *V{foo :: *} :: MeST L{a} bar :: IO () bar = putStrLn. fst fromGlobal "foo" That means that the value of fst fromGlobal "foo" is bound, and the GHC typechecker sees that bound and has no problem. This is a bug in the reported code, really - if you didn't see the error it's

October 2018 - Your Reaction 43 Years Ago 1971
Today is October 7, 1971. Behind & Shown Here is an October 1975 photo session for a program to help raise money for the.. broadcast of an American musical-comedy called "A Different Kind of Normal" opened in the U.S. in March 1974. On New Year's Eve of 1975, CBS broadcast a TV movie called "New Year's Eve," which featured an outstanding cast of actors that included one of the brightest young stars of the era,...he was starting to make his own big name for himself, Carol Burnett, who is so featured in the movie but the name most people are going to know her for, first, today, is the name Mavis Staples. I'm sure the more than a few people who've ever seen this story, who are in the know about her, probably didn't know Mavis "Staple" Staples, but we're going to get to her in a little while. Upgraded or not, the New York Times really got it right that day. It called it "another television record." I feel the same way about the good times that followed, because I'm writing on a good day. History has not been written yet, but the Times, which is reported to be going out of business, did get this one right, and that's saying a lot these days. Another star was about to emerge in television, but first, I think, we'll explore the broadcast of "New Year's Eve" and how it became the all-time #1 broadcast television show of all time! Back to the Girls It was Super Bowl II, and Americans from one end of the country to the other were watching game or the Super Bowl. It was the beginning of color televised sports. Television was transcending the minutiae of sound. The game was played in the Los Angeles Coliseum, which was nearly empty, because since 1958 the New York Giants and the Green Bay Packers had played in the championship game on New Year's Day. Not now, thanks to a paid television audience, and not in December 1965. Why was this the first time for television? It was the first Super Bowl, and it was the first time three network suitors had come to the
