It also believes that the public should not be forced to engage with government officials behind closed doors. In 2003, Protect the Land, a non-profit organization dedicated to public lands issues, was formed to provide information, involve citizens and involve state government. With the support of a handful of public agencies and millions of public dollars, it began to educate people about the need to protect the state's public lands. The central mission of Protect the Land is to protect California's land—including the protection of state and federal parks and recreation areas, to keep them open and available to future generations. What does Protect the Land do? 1. Provide citizens with facts, data and science on California's public lands. 2. Use a variety of marketing tools and communications to invite people to be involved. 3. Keep citizens up-to-date on the state and federal legislative and regulatory processes affecting the state's public lands. Protect the Land says, "If
