What's New In?

Both flying squirrels were taken for biologists conducting research at the Northern and Western Illinois University in order to learn more about their natural habitats and behavior. The two northern flying squirrels have been identified to be from the species Glaucomys sabrinus. They are 20 inches in length and have white to bluish-gray fur. They are a medium-sized squirrel, according to the US Fish and Wildlife Service. Under squirrels, walking is commonly seen amongst them as well. They normally live in open forests and can be found in highly wooded and treed areas from February to August, according to the Ornithology Fishes and Wildlife Center. Their diet is made up of mainly vegetation. They are rarely seen at higher altitudes. They usually spend their time in the lower part of trees. Like most squirrels, flying squirrels are classified as a nocturnal animal. Conservation They are under the category of the IUCN Red List of threatened species. This means that they are listed as a species whose population is decreasing because of threats. A soft-skinned flying squirrel The IUCN Red List classifies them as vulnerable. The reasons as to why they are classified as vulnerable are not known. The current population of flying squirrels is estimated to be 5,500 animals. Population of flying squirrels at the Northern and Western Illinois University At the time of this study, there were 77 individuals of Glaucomys in a 400-acre area. The number of glaucomys is declining all the time because of deforestation. This study suggests the glaucomys species is a slow breeder. Closing Comments Of the total two living flying squirrels found, one was taken in Dixon and the other was taken in the nearby area of Glenview, Illinois. The author, Dr. Rebecca Masci, is a National Science Foundation EAGER awardee at the University of Florida, Gainesville. Mentioned in the article are the two researchers who took the flying squirrels: Jonathan Spitters and Jonah Vinke.(PhysOrg.com) -- Evolutionary biologist Gregory Wallace of the University of California, Berkeley, has a new paper posted at the Nature website that tries to explain why species diversity has remained virtually unchanged despite our continual take over of the planet. Until recently,
