Creating Shapes You can draw a variety of shapes on a layer. A shape defines a specific type of container within a layer. Shapes let you make selections like a painter would by using a paintbrush or a paint roller. _Selections_ are similar to selection tools in software programs, like Adobe Photoshop, but offer a different purpose. With the Draw Tool, you can create a shape like a circle, a square, or a freeform polygon. You can also create a dashed or dotted line to use as a border. For each shape, you can specify the type of line. When you draw a line, you can choose any of the line types, from a solid line to dashed lines, dotted lines, or styled lines. (Styled lines are lines with no angles, and they are popular in photo retouching because they give a more natural appearance to straight lines.) You can also choose the thickness of a line.

We use the densities computed on the lattice and define $$\begin{aligned} \rho^{\mathbf{c}}_{\tau\tau'}(\omega) \equiv \rho^{\text{lat}}_{\tau} (\omega) \rho^{\text{lat}}_{\tau'}(\omega) \,\end{aligned}$$ where $\rho^{\text{lat}}_{\tau}(\omega) \equiv - \Im \Delta^{\text{lat}}_{\tau}(\omega)$ is the spectral function of the lattice Hamiltonian. Note, however, that only the two-point correlation function $C(t) \equiv {\langle \hat{\rho}_{\tau}(t) \hat{\rho}_{\tau}(0) \rangle}$ (normalized to 1) is measured in experiments. By taking the continuum limit in the above definition of $\rho^{\mathbf{c}}_{\tau\tau'}(\omega)$, the signal $C(t)$ can be related to the spectral function via the integral $$\begin{aligned} \rho^{\mathbf{c}}_{\tau\tau'}(\omega) = \int_{ -\infty}^{\infty} \frac{d \omega'}{2 \pi} \frac{C(\omega')}{i (\omega - \omega') - \omega'} \label{eq:rho_tau}\end{aligned}$$ in the two-channel Kondo problem. Note that this is a real quantity on the Keldysh contour. D. V. Khveshchenko and H. Leal, arXiv: cond-mat/0506
