Author:Krishna., History - Start page: 1; Last updated: 6.The primary objective of this program project renewal application is to characterize the mechanisms by which anti-idiotypic antibodies recognize and neutralize immunoglobulin molecules, in order to provide a rational basis for the development of new therapeutic approaches for autoimmune diseases. Specifically, 1) antibodies from human bone marrow to murine monoclonal anti-idiotypic antibodies will be generated using a novel chimeric (mouse and human) monoclonal anti-idiotypic antibody, and 2) the idiotypic specificities of these anti-idiotypic antibodies will be analyzed. The investigators propose to evaluate whether the idiotypic antibodies have the same idiotypic specificities as their antigens. They will also examine whether some of these idiotypic antibodies may recognize CDR sequences, and therefore may be effective in altering the antigenic binding properties of their target antigens. The rationale is that anti-idiotypic antibodies directed against anti-DNA idiotypes may be able to interfere with normal B cell development, or modulate the idio type expression of an autoantibody. Furthermore, a subset of these anti-idiotypic antibodies will be able to recognize and lyse clones of B lymphocytes with tumor-like properties, and such idio type-specific agents could potentially be used as adjunctive therapy with conventional chemotherapy. The investigators will examine the idiotypic specificities of anti-idiotypic antibodies generated in this fashion in order to determine if they have the same idiotypic specificities as their antigens. They will also examine whether these anti-idiotypic antibodies can recognize the CDR sequences of their antigens. These studies could also be used in general as a means of examining the idiotypic specificity of anti-idiotypic antibodies, and the functional significance of specific idiotypes. Ultimately these studies may also provide information with respect to the selective pressure exerted by anti-idiotypic antibodies on the B cell repertoire in both normal and autoimmune individuals.Nonsteroidal
