Chapel Fach President Trump fired former chief strategist Steve Bannon on Friday, in the latest shake-up of his White House team. The president “decided he’s not in the team anymore,” said Sarah Huckabee Sanders, press secretary. Mr. Bannon’s ouster may follow his big public splash in the first week of the administration, when he declared war on establishment Republicans. But some of Mr. Trump’s aides and allies say it also reflects concerns within the West Wing that he has not been willing to temper his aggressive style of decision-making. The move comes as Mr. Bannon faces an investigation by special counsel Robert Mueller, who is looking into the possibility of coordination between the Trump campaign and Russia, a person familiar with the investigation said. Mr. Bannon's relationship with the president has been turbulent. The two have never seen eye to eye and had a fraught relationship after the former top strategist was pushed out of the Trump campaign in August 2016. In his first meeting with a president since leaving the campaign, Mr. Bannon attended a dinner for the president-elect in New York last November. Mr. Bannon had traveled with the president-elect from New York to Bedminster, N.J., for a meeting at Trump National Golf Club. But the two reportedly did not speak that night and did not speak until they spoke the next morning at the president's golf club in Bedminster. "I said, 'Look, we're here at your golf club. We're all friends,'" Mr. Bannon recalled in an interview with Axios that aired on HBO on Sunday. "I said, 'This will
