Naruto Shippuden: Ultimate Ninja .Field of the Invention Embodiments of the invention generally relate to a method of etching a substrate, and more particularly, a method of anisotropic etching a silicon nitride/silicon oxide stack. Description of the Related Art Integrated circuits have evolved into complex devices that can include millions of components (e.g., transistors, capacitors and resistors) on a single chip. The evolution of chip designs continually requires faster circuitry and greater circuit densities. The demand for greater circuit densities necessitates a reduction in the dimensions of the circuit elements. This reduction in dimensions (e.g., shrinkage) causes the dimensions of the integrated circuit chip to be reduced. Wafer manufacturing strives to reduce the dimensions of the circuit components in order to increase overall performance and reduce device power consumption. Regardless of the efficacy of a particular manufacturing process, there will be minimum limits to how much the components of the integrated circuit may be scaled using a conventional photolithographic process. As a result, circuit designers focus on developing methods to further increase the number of components that may be manufactured within the constraints of conventional photolithography. Certain integrated circuit device technologies, such as silicon-on-insulator (SOI) technologies, are compatible with the design and manufacture of scaled integrated circuits. SOI technology may facilitate the shrinkage of device dimensions by reducing a number of semiconductor (e.g., silicon) regions (e.g., the "real" substrate) used to form each component in a circuit. In SOI technology, a buried insulator layer separates a base substrate, or starting substrate, from an overlying semiconductor layer, or finishing substrate. The SOI structure provides a surface from which to form a semiconductor component. In integrated circuit implementations, the semiconductor component may include transistors and/or resistors. The overlying semiconductor layer may be comprised of, for example, silicon, germanium, or a III-V compound semiconductor. In addition, the finish substrate is usually comprised of silicon, germanium, or a III-V compound semiconductor. One method used in an SOI process to construct a semiconductor component is selective wafer bonding (e.g., 0cc13bf012
