A: Your read seems to be quite off, and the line php -f [C:\files\quickbooks\intuit_qbw.php] should be php [C:\files\quickbooks\intuit_qbw.php] (note the [and the space between) The -f option tells PHP to run the command, and to echo the text (and as a result end up in your file). The -f [C:\files\quickbooks\intuit_qbw.php] tells it to run the command [C:\files\quickbooks\intuit_qbw.php], but to ignore the output. Which it does, and the file remains empty. Note also that an other option is php [C:\files\quickbooks\intuit_qbw.php] > [C:\files\quickbooks\intuit_qbw.php] (which is the way it is done in a shell). But I think you already know this. Keywords: Abstract Airborne laser Doppler velocimetry (LDV) and a photographic image collecting system are used to study the wake structure and transient growth of a subsonic vortical vortex at a blunt body during the simulation of an inflow bifurcation. The height of the boundary between the back wall and the wind flow is chosen so that a steady translation wakes before the flow separation. The back wall is a model of a solid ground surface with a uniform thickness of 0.25 m. The inflow boundary condition at the front wall is a no-slip convective boundary condition. The synthetic flow field data, which is in good agreement with the data obtained from a numerical simulation, are used to study the growth of the vortex. Based on the wake structure and the transient growth phase, the growth of the vortex is studied at the wall. Both the characteristics of the vortex wake and the coefficients of the transient growth of the vortical structure are analyzed and compared with that of the analytical vortex wake. The influence of the bluff body on the drag distribution and the flow structure is analyzed. Finally, the results are compared to the previous experimental and numerical studies. }
