Ultrafast Dynamics of Transition Metal Dichalcogenide Nanoribbon Complex. The dynamics of electrons in the valence band of MDCNR is studied. The dynamics are simulated with the use of equation of motion approach based on two-component wavefunctions corresponding to two energy bands. The time-dependent Kohn-Sham orbitals are built, using time-dependent density functional theory, for a set of five nanoribbons where the d-bands and their local environments are varied. From the time-dependent density of electrons in the conduction and valence bands, we calculate the velocity of the conduction electrons at the Fermi level and energy loss rate of electrons through the Coulomb scattering from the first three excited states of the valence band. We calculate these quantities as functions of the ribbon width. The results obtained show that the electronic relaxation processes in MDCNRs are ultrafast, and the relaxation time is of the order of
