In this article we will explain what the new technology is, how it works and how to play the new game modes as well as a few tips and tricks you can use to benefit from this new technology. In comparison to the previous FIFA game, the basic movement elements in FIFA 22 are slightly different. Player models are now 3D-models and the new game engine features a new AI engine, which looks at the scenarios and player attributes during simulations and makes actions accordingly. In the following article, we will explain how the "HyperMotion Technology" works and how you can benefit from it in FIFA 22. How Does "HyperMotion Technology" Work? How does it work? What's new? It is a combination of real world data and a player prototype. You will have to manually pre-load the motion capture data. There is an option to automatically match the motion data with your current player model. The new game engine uses a motion transfer system to make it dynamically possible to play the game as it would be in the real world. You can automatically transfer the animations and actions of your real-life player to FIFA 22. We will explain these in more detail below. How Does it Work? In FIFA 22, all 22 player models are actually motion capture models (3D models created by professional motion capture experts). These models come with motion capture data. There is a motion transfer engine which is based on a combination of motion capture and movement prediction algorithms. You can either import a real-life player and activate the "Motion Transfer" option or you can use an in-game "Motion Data" option in the editor. In addition, FIFA 22 now features a new player prototype. This prototype shows the exact movement data and animations of your player. You can choose to automatically use your real-life movement data or player data as motion capture data in FIFA 22. How to Play the New Game Modes with "HyperMotion Technology" In FIFA 22, you can play all modes as you are used to play them today. There are just some changes and features that are bound to the new "Motion Technology." First, you will need to load the motion capture data for your respective player (PC/Xbox One) Next, the "Motion
