Antigens was set up in 1964 to enable quality assurance (QA) of the influenza antigens produced by WHO Collaborating Centers of National Influenza Centres (CC-NICs). The QA program is carried out jointly by the CC-NICs and WHO CC Influenza Laboratories (WHO-CCIL) according to WHO,

Public Health Agency of Canada (PHAC) and National Institute for Biological Standards and Control (NIBSC) guidelines. To ensure the continued high level of research, the establishment of a WHO Collaborating Centre for Cell Culture and Viral Reference at the National Institute for Biological Standards and Control (NIBSC) was approved by the WHO CCs in 1994. This Centre plays a pivotal role in the production, characterization and distribution of influenza viruses (vaccine strains and reference strains) to WHO CCs and many laboratories around the world. The Centre has its own cell culture laboratory and a virology laboratory which is equipped with state-of-the-art instrumentation such as an automated nucleic acid extractor.

Conventionally, it is known that in order to obtain electrostatic printing plates, the surface of a dielectric support is subjected to be electrostatically charged in one or more steps comprising: i) a drying step, during which the surface of the support is dried and a pre-preparative treatment is performed so as to facilitate subsequent steps; ii) a charging step, during which the support is charged; iii) a toner transfer step, during which, by means of a contact electrostatic printing system (CP system), a transferable toner image is formed on a final support in contact with the surface of the support opposite to the said surface to be developed; and iv) a development step, during which the toner image carried by the support is developed by a liquid or semi-liquid developer (carrier liquid) deposited on the developed support. In this context, the Applicant has already proposed a type of transfer apparatus, which is known under the name of “MW” apparatus (“M” stands for magnetic, “W” stands for contact, see for example the article by E. Carasso, M. Iovino, L. Zani published in “PROFILES ACETONIENSES” in the September 1999 issue). This “MW” apparatus comprises a development station whose support is held in sliding contact with
