I have a MacBook Pro (13") 2010 Edition, running MacOSX 10.9.5. I have Debian 7 installed on an external hard disk that is always connected to the computer. For some reasons, I'd like to install only MacOSX on the computer and boot into it using Debian (the MacOSX installer doesn't allow an encrypted root partition). Question: can I boot a MacOSX/Bootcamp partition using a Debian Live CD? A: The Boot-Repair CD can do this, but it's easy to do it yourself too. If you hold down the option key as you boot, you get a boot menu that has all of the OS's that it can boot from. Any of them can be selected and the MacOSX partition can be mounted, then you can install the Debian on it. How to boot a linux OS from windows: Q: How to disable my virtual keyboard in Swift? Possible Duplicate: How to disable UITextField becomeFirstResponder in swift? I have a input field in Swift and I would like to disable my virtual keyboard when the input is focused. How can I do this? A: The keyboard is designed to be as configurable as possible. You could create your own alternative View, and customise the behaviours of the system keyboard. You'll need to make a custom View in which you include the functionality you require. The following is an example of a custom View for the system keyboard. This is a simple example to illustrate how such a design could be made; import UIKit import Foundation class CustomViewController: UIViewController { override

Watch American Pie 3 Hindi Full Movie Free DownloadQ: Force "Real-time" mode in Xcode 4 I'm doing a project for iOS development and I have all my issues explained well here: Problem with NSLog and NSException in iOS Simulator. I'm finding the answer is annoying to implement; and I have seen the answer for a couple of days, but I can't figure out how to force Xcode (or Xcode 4, at least) to run on "Real-time" instead of "Events." I've read all the info on the internet about how to implement this. I've tried googling, and I found this question and answer that I've tried, but it didn't work. The answer doesn't explain how to do this, it only says how to implement this, but doesn't tell you how to force the "real-time" mode. It does tell you how to make your application in "real-time", but I'm not sure how to turn it on. I want to use the simulator/mobile device simulator for testing the code, NOT Xcode. EDIT: To answer the question that I'm getting asked now: iOS only switched to "Event" mode on the real-time thread. The "Real-time" mode is completely separate from the "Event" mode. If you need to test your code in the "Event" mode, then all you need to do is change the mode by going to the menu bar, clicking on the "Debug" tab, and changing the mode to "Event." If you're running into the same problem as I am, then what you need to do is enter "run" (which will open the "Simulator" window). You need to then go into "Edit" > "Run Selection" > "Run as Real-time Application" and click on "Enable" (which should open the "Simulator" window). This will change the mode to "Real-time." Then all your Simulator output will show up in the "Log Navigator" window. A: Right click on the "Growl Window" that opens when you click on the Debug navigator on the bottom left of the Xcode 4 window. This will give you d0c515b9f4
