The internal cavity may be divided into an inflatable chamber, a liner, a cushion, a tether and other portions. The inflatable chamber may be inflated upon collision of the vehicle in order to cushion an occupant and restrain the occupant against injury. The inflatable chamber may be inflated by an inflation gas generated from a source of inflation gas. An inflation gas source may also be used to inflate a vehicle seat cushion or vehicle seatback cushion. In some embodiments, a seat cushion is inflated at one time and a seatback cushion is inflated at a later time. In such a manner, the inflation gas source may be relatively small. The use of an inflation gas source to inflate a portion of an air bag module may result in inflation gas generated from the inflation gas source being directed through a circuitous path before entering the interior of the air bag module. For example, the inflation gas source may be in fluid communication with the interior of the housing and the interior of the air bag module through one or more passages in the housing. Thus, in some instances, the inflation gas may travel through a circuitous path before entering the inflatable chamber. Additionally, a high force may be exerted on the inflation gas source during inflation of the portion of the air bag module. For example, the housing and/or the inflation gas source may be squeezed and/or flexed during inflation of the portion of the air bag module. In such a manner, the inflation gas source may rupture. an integrated circuit chip that enables the chip to operate at a high clock frequency without being significantly affected by the radiated electromagnetic emissions.
