The success of this strategy depends on the effective management of operations and the protection of the integrity of the UK's reputation as a country trading on the global stage. The Foreign Corrupt Practices Act of 1976 UK law requires companies that operate overseas to manage the risks of corruption in overseas markets. The Companies Act 2006 introduced new rules under the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act (FCPA) so that all UK companies with an interest in, or office in, a foreign country are required to assess the risks and take action to manage these risks. Management of Public Relations and External Affairs Public Relations and External Affairs (PRA) is a strategy for UK companies to maintain a consistent message about their brand to the key audiences which drives the creation and development of effective reputation management strategies that support their international business objectives. PRA UK has developed a reputation management advice framework that helps companies develop effective UK-based communication, understanding how to leverage and manage the impact of international media communications.
